Hysterically Written Story of Brutality of Big Fight Funniest Thing Connected With Willard-Moran Bout.

Copyright 1976, by The Press Publishers Co. (The New York L. thing W. P. C.) Now that the Willard-Moran match is a tune of the past the funny things counseted with it are attracting a little Attention. Funniest of all are the hysterically written descriptions of the fight -especially those written for the purpose of making it appear that it was a terribly brutal affair, which it certainly was not. "The blood cascaded down his face and breast and was smeared to the four corners of the ring," says one writer, referring to Moran after a glancing blow had made a slight cut. "By the sixth round Moran's wounded eye had been puffed shut,"

The funny part is that this is pure invention. No such things occurred. No blood "cascaded." The four corners of the ring were not besmeared. Moran's eye was not "puffed shut." In fact, it wasn't puffed at all. Both of his eyes were very wide open and keeping a keen lookout for a chance to land something on the luge, laughing giant, who so easily prodded him away with extended left. As far as I could see, the only severe damage was to Moran's self esteem. He had announced that he expected to knock Willard out. He landed his best blows, and Willard hughed. He might as well have tried to knock out the so well have tried to knock out the sawdust punching during at his training quarters. He was scratched and bruised a little, and very, very much annoyed. But that was all, in the course of his athletic career. Frank Moran has played many football games that were harder tests of his courage and endurance than his bout with Willard. And he didn't get $26,750 for playing, either. $26,750 for playing, either.

There's more "blood" in the fight stories printed in some sensational papers than has been shed in the ring since padded places were in-vented.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., March 28. SHOUGH the infield problem of the Yanks is more serious than that of the outfield, Bill Donovan feels comfortably safe. His assistants are even enthusiastic. The possibilities for a championship crew to protect the inner works of the club are made up of Pipp, first base; Gedeon, second base; Peckinpaugh, shortstop; Baker, third base, and Mullen, Baumann and Boone as utility men. It is a versatile crew. Either of the last two can play in any position excepting first base. Mullen can do that. In fact he was hired for that particular job two years ago.

John L. Sullivan, the popular ex-heavyweight champion, who now makes a living lecturing on the drink evil, was the only man to declare Frank Moran the winner of last Saturday night's battle. John was hired o furnish a story by the syndicate owned by the man who has started he anti-boxing agitation. John was introduced to the crowd and got the biggest reception of the night. After the fight he was loud in his denunciation of the champion, whom he styled a "big dub." When asked

"The only thing brutal about the Willard-Moran bout was the prices they charged to see those chumps box. The people who are now getting after the boxing game might get after those brutalizing chess matches while they're at it. If the Willard-Moran bout was brutal, men have become chicken-hearted past endurance."

said Davy Robertson, the slugging outfielder of the Glants, to-day, "Mac knows why I haven't reported and he is satisfied. I don't see why anybody alse should worry. The fact of the business is I have a contract with the New York Club to report on May I. That was agreed to because I expected to be at school again this year. As I did not go to college I will, of my own accord, report almost a month carrier than my contract calls for and I will be in shape

"I have been suffering from an injury to my leg since last December and, while I feel all right now, my physician has advised against my taking any strengous exercise if I want to be right when the time comes to play ball. The kind of work they put you through at Marlin would have put me out of business, and my physician has written a letter to the owners of the club telling them so. I are working out in the gymnasium here and limbering up. I shall get out on the diamond in a few days and be ready for the team when it stops here for an exhibition game. When the season opens I shall be in as good shape as ever.

"And I guess I'll have to so some to keep up with Henny Kauff, if he is the wonder he says he is," Dave said, "But I'll give them the best there is in me. That is all that any man can do. I have no reason to fear that my work will not be better than it was last
